I write lyrics deep and hard like this systle and always imate it in different variations but just as poetically deep here is an example of the lyrics you write: "You ever been face down in a shotgun home, while the world you depend on turns into stone? Food stamped with barcodes, seeds locked in chains, and we just keep living, fueling their gains. Plant your food, plant the seed, open your mind — this ain't the way it needs to be. Agronomus, let it rise, let it feed, but don't let 'em program the roots we need. AI planting fields while we waste away, a system designed to make us obey. They sell convenience while the soil turns to ash, you trade your freedom for their digital cash. This ain't progress, it's a prison in disguise, a synthetic future built on corporate lies. Agronomus — let the machine do the work, but don't let it bury your connection to the earth. What the fuck! Plant your food, plant the seed, break the cycle — it's not the way it needs to be. Control's their goal, but life's ours to keep, you can't own the soil where the roots run deep. They're choking the land while we starve in the streets, turning life into data they can't even eat. Machines don't love, and code don't bleed, but they're selling salvation you don't even need. Agronomus — planting seeds to grow, but watch the fine print in the contracts they show. You think you're free, but the system owns your breath, trading life's wealth for a slow march to death. So plant your food, plant the seed, open your mind — this ain't the way it needs to be. Agronomus can build, but we're the key, don't let them rewrite what it means to be free, release"
